Breath

I waited until your leaves turned yellow
But no monarchs came I stole your silk
that would have flown
Again the skies were empty I save each seed
and plant each one In hope that next year
the monarchs come

Swallow

perhaps I was a worm who ate the misshapen leaves of a tall and lanky tree that wove itself into archaic link fence in a blaze of foolish growth and somehow turned those leaves into the finest silk
