

Butterfly's Wings

Butterfly's Wings

Butterfly's Wings

NEW YORK
HODDER & STOUGHTON

wings! ~ Other people have babies, babies both fair and fine, ~ but nobody else in the whole wide world would have a baby like mine, ~ if the Fairy kept her promise." She got quite discontent; ~ and every morning after that, and every evening, she spent ~ a lot of time examining and feeling each tiny shoulder. ~ For she thought: "Perhaps the wings will show as the child gets bigger and older." ~ But weeks went by, and months went by, and years, —one, two, three, four. ~ Psyche remained exactly the same little wingless girl as before. ~ And the Queen, who had wanted something of which she could make a boast, ~ was very cross with the Fairy and cross with herself, —but most ~ cross with the poor little Psyche, as if she had been to blame. ~

beco