

Ceilings (Or, In Defense of the Chandelier)

This act of giving specific activity to a historically central inert object, a shape-giver to the intangible photon, and a phenomena of Illumination.

Originating from the French word chandelle, the translation of chandelier is simply candle holder. A byproduct is an incidental or secondary product made in the manufacture or synthesis of something else. This reflected, refracted light on the ceiling is the incidental gift, given generously to the room, by the chandelier itself. This act affirms its specific activity as a historically central interior object, a shape-giver to the intangible photon, and a phenomena of illumination.
