In RISD'S Apparel Design program, students learn to meet the highest requirements of the fashion industry and articulate a unique vision through clothing they both design and make. Emphasizing conceptual rigor matched by strong artistic and technical skills, the program guides majors through each stage of the apparel design process — from concept sketches to beautifully executed wearables.

Apparel Design majors enter the department their sophomore year, after first completing RISD's required year of Experimental and Foundation Studies. Exploring a range of materials, students learn pattern drafting, draping and construction, while becoming adept at using high-end industry software to design and render clothing. Practical skill-building is supported by the examination of historical and cultural context, with grounding in the workings of the fashion industry.

As a close-knit group, Apparel Design majors benefit from regular interaction with alumni and other visiting critics and design professionals. Visits to New York's fashion district, along with required internships and competition opportunities, allow for important exposure to the industry.
