THE HOLY LAND

were close, I saw a little orchard, two or three masses of volcanic stone, a wall by the water, and a Franciscan monk in brown and a great white building lying slowly up and down under some eucalyptus trees.

The father was German, but he could speak Italian and in that language he told me that he lived there alone, with some dogs, to look after the excavations.
He showed me the black and white ruins, which were the remains of a large building in which Christ had lived. He told me that he had been there for many years, and that he had seen many things. He told me that he had seen the place where Christ had been crucified, and that he had seen the place where he had been buried. He told me that he had seen the place where Christ had risen from the dead.
