RHODE ISLAND SCHOOL OF DESIGN PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND

To George Bradley

who, by his quiet dignity, wry humor and genuine dedication, has proven that humanity can co-exist with the ever increasing mechanics of administration.

RISD

In an ever-changing world, surrounded on the one hand by international pressures from all corners of the globe, and on the other by new domestic tensions and crises we sometimes wonder whether the only permanent values are those implicit in the aims of the Rhode Island School of Design. All around us we are being asked to accept inferior products and standards of mediocrity and planned obsolescence in design and artistic taste. RISD is an oasis in a barren wasteland, a society unto itself which has set out to raise these standards of taste and design, to produce designers and artists whose aesthetic values and artistic competence extends beyond the mere grasp of technique and manipulative skill, to produce responsible designers capable of relating their aims and ideals to the world that surrounds them.

Located in the great cultural milieu of the Northeast, a few hours traveling time separates the student from the magnificent cultural opportunities available in the megalopolis that extends from Washington and Philadelphia to New York and Boston. The Metropolitan Museum and the Museum of Modern Art in New York comprise two of the greatest facilities imaginable for a close study of art and design ranging from the oldest European cultural heritage to the ever-changing and innumerable forms of contemporary art. New York is also the focal point for commercial and advertising art, where the "gray flannel" advertising executive attempts to mold the opinions and purchasing power of the consumer world.

The School of Design has a subtle yet pervasive effect upon the city of Providence. In the few years that we have lived and worked here, the city has moved forward in great strides in both redevelopment and restoration. Perhaps a great deal of this increasing civic and social awareness can be traced to the influence of the School of Design, which lists among its patrons and faculty some of the leading citizens and opinion-makers of the city. The Museum of the School of Design houses a magnificent collection that can be looked upon with pride by every citizen of the state. And what citizen or visitor to Providence is not impressed by the architecture of the new structural complex that sits on the hill, overlooking and dominating the city?

When a visitor of the School of Design attempts to penetrate into the Society itself, he is confronted with an image of fantastic panoply that operates on innumerable levels of artistic endeavor and design. The areas and activities run the gamut from unlimited artistic freedom and expression of forms in the fabled sculpture pit to the measured, ordered and categorized discipline of the Architecture Department. With a guide, the visitor may begin his series of visual impressions with the chaos of clay and metal forms emerging from the dust and noise of the sculpture pit. If he is not already overwhelmed by this, he can move on to intrude upon the clay-covered student intently absorbed over a revolving potters wheel or working with the kiln in the Ceramics Department. On this level of work, he cannot overlook the students who are completely immersed in the physical realities and properties of the materials they work with. Moving on, he comes upon the quiet concentration of a drawing class, where a walk between the easels of the students causes little notice, since each student is bent on applying his personality and ability to a sheet of newsprint. The atmosphere of quiet and intense concentration in a painting class differs only in that it is presented to us in the complete spectrum of colors, on the canvases as well as on the jeans, hands, and faces of the student. These are the areas of activity that the visitor traditionally associates with his image of an art school.

However, changing his direction of movement, he can move across yet another level, that of the area of the liberal arts. Here the school attempts both to acquaint the student with and relate him to the artistic and literary traditions of which he is in the process of becoming an integral part. From this temporary respite, the visitor must once again proceed to further levels of activity in design and endeavour. He can see the inner workings of one of the newest and most contemporary modes of "seeing"—the discipline and technique of the photographic eye. He comes upon the rigorously scheduled and rigid training program of Freshman Foundation. He can glimpse briefly into the world of fabric, pins, and dummies of the Fashion Department, and he can walk among the work-desks to get some idea of the multiplicity of the projects and the ideas that come within the reach of Graphic and Industrial Designers.

On yet another level, he can view that discipline that is farthest from the chaos of the sculpture pit. This is the ordered, measured and geometric world of the Architect. These designers in their jackets and ties appear as if they could never bring themselves to mingle, yet alone merge, with the denizens of the sculpture pit, or even remotely share similiar aims and ideals. Yet they do.

Perhaps there is really no way that a stranger can resolve the curious dichotomy that he finds here. He is, after all, "on the outside looking in."

It is this strange-yet-plausible environment that set us, the students, apart from the people that daily surround us. We are a part of that curious society, the Rhode Island School of Design, who strive for excellence, who strive to relate our aspirations and ideals to Design in a contemporary world. In this goal we are united.

Frank Best

To Members of the Class of 1966:

It gives me special pleasure to offer our best wishes to the members of the Class of 1966. Having entered R.I.S.D. together, we have learned much as we have become increasingly immersed in this college and its acts of self-renewal.

To rehearse the history you and I have acted in this college for four years is superfluous, for each of us stands witness to his own experience of it. Rather, there is need for reaffirming what has been constant among all the changes: notably, our celebration of creative thought and action; our insisting and re-insisting that art is not necessity, not gimmick, entertainment, therapy or game; and our enjoyment of uncommon satisfactions in discoveries valued for quality beyond any utility or expediency.

For my part, I hope that each of you will find continued sustenance in those dedications and that your example in the several communities where you shall reside and work will nurture respect and enjoyment for the arts in America. In that further triumph, which you shall be a life-time achieving, your college will fulfill the mandate of its founders and the purpose of its teachers.
