and pretty soon the hounds was after him, and the patrollers, too, with bull whips what they carried all the time.
Anyway, dem bloodhounds track Uncle Bill to the river and smell him out where he was hiding. They tell about if after they come back to tell Master Grant his slave is dead. "The dogs got him" one of the men say, "they got him so good he is tore to pieces!" From what dey say the dogs just eat him like dey would cow meat; dere wasn't nothing left to bury!

But there was one slave, Boyl Green, who lived on a plantation nearby that my husband told me about after we was married. That Negro said he never would let nobody whip him. One day the Master got killing mad about something and told his overseer to bring in Boyl from the field. When he come in there was his master waiting with a whip and a gun. He handed the gun to the overseer and spoke to the slave, "Boyl, you're going to get a good whipping or a shooting—which you going have!" Boyl he just look straight at his Master and said, "You never going whip me! Nobody going whip me! The Master motion and the overseer raise the gun and shoot Boyl right through the heart—that's the way some Masters done."

...and the overseer raise the gun may some Masters done.
